Optimizing Solvent Choices to Satisfy Air Quality Regulations

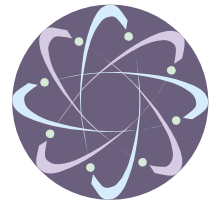

The process of solvent selection for coatings continues to be dynamic. Driven by ongoing and changing air quality regulations, formulators are challenged to design new solvent blends that satisfy the performance, environmental and cost constraints required for a specific application. Currently, the primary concern among coating formulators is the reduction of HAP and VOC levels in existing formulations.

The following presentation will review regulatory changes (HAP/ VOC issues and the newer “Incremental Reactivity” methodology) and solvent choices for optimizing the performance and environmental properties of a solventborne coating.

Ranae Anderson is a Senior Technical Service Representative for Eastman Chemical Company with nearly 10 years of experience working in formulating, material analysis, and quality control in the chemicals industry. In her current position, she is responsible for providing technical service, information and education to customers of Eastman’s solvent products. She holds a BS in chemistry from Tuskegee University and a MS in Colloid, Polymer and Surface sciences from Carnegie Mellon University in Pittsburgh, Penn. Her Topic today will be on, “Optimizing Solvent Choices to Satisfy Air Quality Regulations”.
