W ith the changes in resin chemistry and synthetic pigment technology, coupled with environmental issues, formulators have been challenged to find additives to perform old functions within the coatings formula. New technology sometimes overlooks basic principals. Successful paint formulating begins by examining the aspects needed to compromise a quality grind paste. Grind paste surgery can be complicated and the wrong diagnosis fatal. The right additives can contribute to a successful operation. Selection of appropriate additives composed of wetting agents and pigment stabilizers will be discussed.

T om Rauls is the technical director at PCI for the last three years and has served in the coatings industry for over twenty five years.
