The Benefits of Microspheres as Pigment Extenders/Fillers

James F. Helbling

3M Energy & Advanced Materials Division

As the name implies, microspheres are small, spherical particles which can be solid, thin shelled, or thick shelled. Microsphere particle sizes normally range from <1 to 300 microns in diameter. They can be composed of glass, ceramic, or polymer materials and have true densities ranging from 0.005 to greater than 2.7 g/cc. Because of their shape and tendency to be non-absorbing they offer unique properties that the formulator can use to their advantage in creating innovative solutions for an increased regulator environment, strong competition, and greater customer demands.

James F. Helbling is a Technical Sales Engineer with 3M Energy and Advanced Materials Division

- B.S. of Chemistry, University of Minnesota
- 27 years at 3M, previous responsibility at 3M with R&D efforts in silicone, fluoropolymer and photo/thermal catalyst synthesis; Product Development/Engineering for 3M Specialty Tape and Adhesive Products.
- Last 14 years focused on Paints, Coatings and Construction (PC3) Markets with responsibility for Technical Service, Marketing and now Key Account Sales.
- Currently supporting 3M's efforts with Glass and Ceramic Microspheres, Novec Fluoro-surfactants and Stain Resistance Additive technologies.
