New VOC-Free Coalescent for Paints & Coatings

Richard Henderson, ELEMENTIS SPECIALTIES

Coalescing agents and glycols are the biggest VOC contributors in today's paint formulations. To meet the government regulations, paint formulators are often searching for additives that do not contribute to the VOC of their paints. In this paper, I will discuss a new generation and VOC-free coalescent which can be utilized in low or no VOC paints and coatings.

RICHARD HENDERSON is currently employed by Elementis Specialties Corporation as a Group Leader, Waterborne Coatings. Dick has over 25 years of experience in the area of coating formulations and additives. Prior to joining in Elementis Specialties in 2007, he worked in the application/technical service labs of ICI NeoResins-(DSM), Akzo-Nobel, Reichhold and Samuel Cabot-(Valspar). He received his Chemistry degree from Merrimack College in 1981.

Bentonite Mining and Processing

Thomas Anderson, BENTONITE PERFORMANCE MINERALS

This presentation will discuss the basic geology of bentonite deposits and how these bentonites are mined and processed. In addition, the unique hydration chemistry found in bentonite clays and how that chemistry affects the physical properties of bentonite will also be discussed. Finally, we'll touch on the treatments and typical uses of bentonite clays.

TOM ANDERSON is a Sales Representative for Bentonite Performance Minerals. He graduated from Northern Illinois University with a Bachelor's of Science degree in Chemistry. He has 28 years of working experience in the Bentonite industry. Tom has worked in every aspect of the Bentonite industry. His work experience includes positions held in research and development, product development, manufacturing, and sales.
